

Dear Chairman Powell and Commissioners,
I basically no longer watch TV. Trying to get relevant info from it is like trying to get nutrition from cotton candy. The quality of the TV isn't actually always bad, but the standards on the political commercials are "dumbing down" our society. I hate being dumbed down.

I'm an activist. I want to be informed about the political and electoral issues that affect my life, I am greatly disappointed by the lack of informative television programming.

Local public affairs programming is virtually non-existent--constituting less than one half of 1% of all local programming. More than half of news broadcasts prior to the 2002 elections did not include a single campaign story. Our democracy is at risk when many Americans don't know basic facts about the candidates or the issues, as was the case in the 2000 elections.

Since broadcasters have clearly failed in their obligation to serve the public interest, the FCC should define meaningful public interest requirements that include local civic and electoral affairs programming. At a minimum, broadcasters should air three hours per week of local civic and electoral affairs programming, with at least two hours devoted to substantive election coverage in the six weeks prior to Election Day.

As the elections approach, a well-functioning democracy demands that citizens have access to a diversity of opinions and voices on the choices confronting us.

My pet cause is education. I've worked on a lot of levy campaigns for local school funding, and the cost of just letting people know there's an election is quite high. Better TV would make our job at campaign time a lot easier.

Sincerely,

Stuart Jenner
